Indianapolis, IN – Indiana Economic Development Association (IEDA) elected Darrell Voelker as President during their recently concluded annual conference. Voelker is the Economic Development Director in Harrison County and he has been an active member in the organization for about 15 years.

IEDA is a member based, volunteer-governed organization dedicated to economic growth in Indiana. IEDA was formed in 1968 and incorporated in 1982 as a statewide not-for-profit economic development organization. The organization now has over 420 members representing state and local economic development organizations, corporations, locally elected officials, state agencies, law firms, utilities, real estate firms engineering firms.

Since its inception, IEDA has focused its efforts on two objectives:

- To utilize the knowledge and resources of the association to make economic development activities in the state more effective; and
- To cooperate and interact with all state and local organizations engaged in promoting the economic welfare of Indiana.

Voelker will serve a one year term as President. He lives in Lanesville with his wife Sheryl and two daughters, Elisabeth and Adrienne.
